“Training the trainer”

By Dr. Richard Perlow

How do you know when your subordinates need training? How do you write learning objectives? How do you set up a training session? These are some of the questions we will address in this interactive seminar designed to help supervisors develop their subordinates. By the end of the seminar, people would be able to craft learning goals, develop instructional objectives, and create a training session plan.

About the presenter:

Dr. Richard Perlow is Associate Professor of human resource management and organizational behavior. From 2006 to 2015 he served as the Faculty of Management Associate Dean.

Dr. Perlow's research interests include personality and other individual differences in performance, counterproductive behavior, and employment discrimination. He has published his research in journals such as the Journal of Applied Psychology, Journal of Business and Psychology, and Human Performance.

Dr. Perlow has taught courses at the undergraduate, MBA, and doctoral level. His teaching interests are in human resource management and organizational behavior topics such as staffing, training, and job performance.
