Mapping the Landscapes of Childhood

Figured in the plural, childhoods pose a significant crossroads for theoretical and empirical work on the nature of being human and development broadly construed, and childhood as an experience, as a social category, as an artistic and literary construct, as a category for historical and demographic analysis, as a category of personhood, and as a locus for human rights and policy interventions. Considering childhoods of the past, present and future, scholars will present research results, policy approaches, and theoretical paradigms that are emergent in this re-engagement with the child and childhoods.

Certification

We will be offering two different certificates. The first is for those who complete the Saturday afternoon workshops (4 hours). The second will be for those who attend the conference and complete the Saturday afternoon workshops (21.5 hours).
